Subject:	RE: Printing of Source Code

Counsel,

Given that the case is now stayed following the August 27, 2021 status conference with Judge Saylor, Singular's request for printing of source code at this time is premature. Google will reconsider Singular's request at the appropriate time if and when the case resumes. At this point, however, as there are no pending expert discovery deadlines and no remaining depositions of Google witnesses, we fail to see any reason for Singular to request such a large number of files other than to review them on paper in the first instance, which is an improper use of source code printouts under the Protective Order. See ECF No. 87 at 17. Furthermore, our initial review indicates that Singular's request exceeds the limits in the Protective Order (see id.) because it amounts to over 500 aggregate pages of source code and includes a number of files that are more than 25 consecutive pages long. Thus, in the event the stay is lifted and Singular renews its request for code, we expect that Singular will make a request at that time that complies with the Protective Order's terms.

Subject: Printing of Source Code

Counsel,

Pursuant to Section 10(a)(v) of the Protective Order, Singular requests that Google print the files identified below that are on the Google source code computer at the Boston offices of Wolf, Greenfield & Sacks. Singular requests that these files be printed using Notepad++ in order to display line numbers. We also request that the printouts be made in color in order to show the color-coding applied by Notepad++:

Please confirm that Google will provide Singular with printouts of the above files by Tuesday, September 7th.

Best,

- Brian
